Antonio Bezerra

THROUGH MY EYES

Kissed by the sun and incredibly beautiful! Brazilian photographer Antonio Bezerra shows us what the world or rather: the world of men looks like through his eyes. And boy, what great men he shows us! They are young but not too boyish; they are sporty but never overloaded with muscles. They are disarmingly handsome in a simple and natural way. And Bezerra knows best how to deal with his models' excellences. His style is classic and his models captivate with their naturalness instead of pin-up poses. Without any effort or excessive staging these aesthetic photographs celebrate male beauty. Looking at them you can tell that Bezerra involves his models into the developing process of his work; that he does whatever he can to make them feel comfortable. The intimacy that his pictures gain thereby is the heartbeat of his work.

A selection of the highlights of Bezerra's oeuvre is now available for the first time in the small but stunning photo book THROUGH MY EYES. It's a book that really lives up to the photographer's ambition: creating something personal, something that allows you to sink into it for a while.

Antonio Bezerra—also known under his pseudonym Didio—was born in Rio de Janeiro and lives in a small shack in the woods of São Paulo. He studied art, movie and fashion and he photographed some of Brazilian's most famous models. His idols are Bruce Weber, Herb Ritts and Mario Vivanco.
